GENERAL EXPLANATIONS ABOUT ASTROLOGICAL INTERPRETATION

Astrology can enlighten our behavior and clarify correlations in life. However, it can't and shouldn't pin a person down. An astrological birth picture consists of symbols that have been translated into words and concrete examples in the following text. For the sake of clarity, some examples have been exaggerated.

What astrology has to say can be explained by using examples. You have different aspects of your personality like your will, feelings, rational mind, etc. Imagine these to be actors who are staging the play of "life" together. Astrology describes the actors, their qualities and weaknesses, and their relationships with each other. But astrology has little to say about the play that is being acted. You decide this with your free will.

Experienced actors to whom you can constantly give new stage directions are necessary for a good play. The more you know the needs of your actors, the more you can bring them together into a harmonious and unified "play" and let them express themselves on your life's stage. The following pages will be a guide for doing this.

When reading them, you will discover contradictions. For example: one section describes the need for a calm and stable relationship, and another section says that you need stimulation and variety within a relationship. Such a contradiction contains the demanding challenge to express both opposites.

The following text is not a "fortune-telling horoscope" because you alone are the architect of your own destiny. The horoscope describes the "raw material" that you have available.

APPEARANCE

The Ascendent symbolizes the "display window" or the "mask" of your personality, which means the qualities that you primarily exhibit to the outside world and other people initially perceive in you. It indicates an area with which you are familiar on the one hand, but challenges you throughout your lifetime to intensively develop your personality on the other hand.

Ascendent in Scorpio

A Mysterious and Enigmatic Exterior

With the Ascendent in Scorpio, you make a mysterious and profound impression on your fellow human beings. You don't show your hand without good reason, but can quite quickly see through others. There is something searching and ponderous about your behavior. Other people may react to this with caution. Life challenges you repeatedly to not only show intensity, commitment, toughness, and the willingness to completely get involved in something as a "mask" to the outside world but also let these attributes become your inner qualities. By more or less playing the role of the person who is searching and able to endure things, you will also bring light into the dark and unknown chambers of your soul. With the passing years, you will develop a penetrating glance that can see behind the surface of yourself, other people, and things in general.

The Ascendent is like a pair of glasses through which you can perceive the surrounding world with a special hue. You want to uncover the causes and correlations and cannot help but ask what the reasons are for every situation. Anything that isn't visible or apparent fascinates you. For example, you have no problem with taking something apart in order to see what is inside, even if this destroys it. You go all out, with endurance and passion, in both positive and negative situations.

Although you have a fine barometer for other people's feelings, you are not always completely willing to be considerate of them. You have the ability of crossing boundaries and breaking taboos, and can deeply hurt others as a result. Life gives you the task of deciding when intervention is right and healing and when it only creates suffering.

ESSENTIAL NATURE AND WILL

Just as the Sun is the central star of the solar system in astronomical terms, it also symbolizes the essential nature of a human being in astrology. Its position in the birth picture tells us something about our ego-consciousness, about our will and the way in which we shape our lives.

Sun in Libra

The Path in Life as a Stylish Work of Art

In your innermost being, you strive for justice, harmony, and peace. Your tactful and affable manner lets you be popular with many people. Getting rid of conflicts is one of your concerns. In doing so, you can develop considerable diplomatic abilities if you face the conflict and don't simply conform for the sake of peace. You are good at approaching other people. At the same time, you always emphasize what you have in common and what connects you with them. You often pay too little attention to the differences. In your endeavor to have the other person like you, you shy away from clearly expressing your own opinion and conform too frequently. You have a hard time making decisions. If you say "yes" to one possibility, you must reject the other. And you have difficulty in general when it comes to saying "no."

Relationships belong to your path in life since you can primarily get to know yourself through another person. If you talk about your concepts of goals, wishes, and problems with someone else, this brings you more clarity than thinking about things for a long time on your own. It's not that the other person tells you what you should do, but you sense your own will better through the exchange. The other person becomes a mirror in which you recognize yourself.

You are an esthete. A world without beauty is unimaginable for you, and you would like to shape your life into a work of art. For example, you place value on stylishly furnished surroundings and often tastefully create them for yourself. You detest everything dark and instinctual as much as you dislike conflict situations. And this is the stumbling block for those born under the sign of Libra. Beauty and balance take up so much space in your concept of life that this can cause you to become superficial. You tend to close your eyes to suffering, war, depression, illness, and other "unpleasant things." In terms of images, Libra symbolizes a race that is high-bred, noble, but not necessarily capable of bearing strain and being fit for reality.

Sun in the Eleventh House

The Path into the Community

You can best show the qualities described above in a team, in a group of like-minded people, or among friends. You can achieve a great deal through teamwork. In a group of people with similar interests, you have the sense of being most alive. Friends can have a great influence on you and stimulate you to new ideas and actions.

Perhaps a societal or social commitment is also appropriate for you. You fundamentally assume that you are a part of the community. Yet, if you identify too much with a group, you lose your independence. So the greatest challenge for you is finding the middle path between the group ideal and your own self with all its individualistic striving. To do this, it's necessary to free yourself of norms and compulsions, take your own independent path, and express your own creativity and originality.

Sun/Mercury in Conjunction

Clear, Subjective Opinions

Will and reason are inseparably connected here. You consider what you want, think your projects through from A to Z, and formulate them clearly. You are presumably skilled at representing your opinions in conversations. Other people's convictions rarely change your mind. Since reason is practically in the service of your will, you probably have a considerable talent when it comes to leading conversations, among other things.

In addition to the positive aspects described above, this connection of reason and will also has its difficult components. Since the rational mind so closely cooperates with the will, it can also lose some of its objectivity. It may happen that you - without noticing it - judge a situation too much on the basis of your personal perspective. You tend to consider and represent your opinion as the irrefutable truth.

Sun/Jupiter in Tension

The Sense of Something Bigger

You have an idealistic attitude and want to identify with something bigger than yourself. In addition to your own lifestyle, the company, the nation, or an ideology are some examples of what your idealistic concepts may be related to. Your need for a pleasant and generous lifestyle can let you become a master of the art of living who keeps restrictive working conditions at arm's length. If another aspect of your being tends toward discipline and responsibility, the need for a generous lifestyle may also cause you to create the foundation for material affluence through work.

But it may be just as possible that you assess your wishes to be impractical castles in the air and just dream about them in your fantasies. Despite this, you will have no rest from them until you have at least attempted to turn them into reality. Your striving for development and something larger and more expansive demands to be listened to. Even if you sometimes exaggerate, the talent for always doing the right thing in a generous and uncomplicated manner still slumbers within you. You can practically see the direction in which things are headed.

Sun/Neptune in a Harmonious Aspect

Being Carried By the River of Life

An aspect of your personality would like to dissolve all boundaries and devote itself to a broader view of things. This makes you impressionable, influenceable, and dedicated; yet, it also weakens your personal will and your ability to assert yourself. You are open and sensitive to your surroundings. Your path in life and your will are influenced by your fellow human beings and the external situation in general. You probably have to retreat into peace and seclusion in order to find out what you want. Defining your position, setting clear goals, and then also translating these into action, is important to you. In concrete terms, your openness and sensitivity can express itself in an enormous willingness to help others. You do many things for the sake of your fellow human beings and perhaps get the worst of the deal yourself.

The ego-dissolving principle can also be experienced through music, meditation, religion, a strong relationship to water, to chaos, addiction, or addicts. This fundamentally deals with letting a greater whole penetrate the ego consciousness and not getting swept away - exposing your own ship to the wind and waves but still keeping the helm in your hand. Learning to do this is a life-long process.

Sun/Pluto in Tension

The Challenge to Develop a Strong Personality

Your birth picture symbolically shows a power theme. It can therefore be presumed that you experienced your father or another important person close to you during your childhood as powerful and dominating. According to this role model, you assume that there are stronger and weaker people in the world; the stronger people exercise power and authority and pull the strings. If your father was a good role model for you and didn't abuse his power, you will probably have developed into a strong personality as well.

However, it's also possible that you surrender the power due to you in part or completely to other people and let others make the decisions. Unconsciously, you repeatedly seek strong people in order to experience friction with them. This may lead to dependency or authority conflicts, which you can ultimately only resolve by finding your own strength and expressing it. Exercising power, in a leading professional position, could give you much joy in life. You have a remarkable power, are capable, have endurance, and can achieve a great deal in as far as you don't misuse your energy for egotistical purposes.

FEELINGS AND TEMPERAMENT

The Moon symbolizes the emotional, childlike/passive, and receptive principle. It stands for the needy part of us that would like to live according to its feelings and spontaneously reacts according to desire or reluctance. In this part of our personality, we are sensitive and impressionable, perceive moods, and need a sense of security and warmth. We can imagine this part to be like a small child within us. If it gets what it needs, we feel good and lively. However, we often have to go through periods of stagnation and discontentment before we recognize and satisfy its needs.

The Moon embodies the feminine principle and also stands for the aspect within us that, full of caring willingness, would like to be a "mother" in the broadest sense of the word. It wants to look after others and create a sense of security.

Moon in Leo

With a Natural Warmth and Flair for Dramatic Gestures

You have a generous, optimistic nature and a great deal of enthusiasm. You want to spontaneously express your feelings, are direct and sincere, and straightforward in saying what you think. At the same time, you may step on other people's toes with your spontaneity.

Your powers of imagination are quite lively. You see every external situation as part of a greater context and react accordingly with dramatic gestures. With your natural warmth, you can be very winning. Since you value attention, you tend to sometimes place yourself too much at the center of attention. You like to be on the sunny side of life and want to miss out on as little of it as possible. You don't like to be reminded of old age, illness, and suffering. It may be that you are a master at covering up your true feelings in certain situations so that your fellow human beings - and perhaps even yourself - don't notice anything of your sadness.

Your unconditional "yes" to life and to yourself gives you a sense of self-assurance. On the other hand, this may also let you be too uncritical toward yourself. Can you accept a well-meant reprimand without feeling this to be a personal insult? If you can learn to also accept yourself as a human being with faults, you will be able to dispense with many of the theatrical gestures that used to be important to you. Your natural sincerity and warmth can then develop without restraint and give you a great deal of joy in life and peace of mind.

Moon in the Ninth House

The Need to Find Meaning for Well-Being

You would like to show your feelings with enthusiasm, stimulate other people with them, and inspire others as a result. At the same time, your opinions and convictions are easily influenced by your momentary emotional state. It's quite probable that you emotionally try to take life from the positive side and are basically an optimist - or would like to be one.

The areas of religion or philosophy appeal to you. When ideologies or opinions are involved, you like to be a part of things. You show a lively interest in issues of meaning and find an inner sense of security by dealing with these issues. There are many things that you understand intuitively without being able to explain why. It's possible that you enjoy travelling. You quickly feel at home in foreign countries and cultures. Perhaps you feel a need to pass on experiences and knowledge; for example, in work as a teacher. This is always a matter of finding possibilities of expressing your world view, which gives you a sense of security and well-being.

Moon/Mercury in a Harmonious Aspect

Thinking and Feeling in Harmony

You have a natural talent for perceiving, understanding, and expressing your feelings and needs. The impression you make on others is lively, realistic, and versatile, and you possess a healthy common sense. Lifeless matter doesn't interest you much. You prefer to learn through experience instead of studying books. Instead of being a strict logical thinker, you tend to be more of a lively story-teller. You feel good when you are around people, and you quickly find contact everywhere. You react on the basis of the present moment and also can cope easily with an unfamiliar situation.

Moon/Venus in Tension

Erotic Partner or Caring Mother?

Feelings and sensuality easily become opposites for you, as well as the roles of mother and intimate partner. It's difficult for you to be both at the same time. In certain situations, you feel well and secure, but don't find them pleasant at the same time. The other way around, a lovely environment may appeal to you, but you don't feel quite well and at home in it. It's hard to you to combine a happy family life and beauty.

What you find to be erotic may only provide little satisfaction on the emotional level. Or things that you enjoy, like a good meal, prove to be difficult to digest. Being involved with the contrasts of domesticity and esthetics or comfort and pleasure in areas like furnishing the home, working in a restaurant or with fashion, could help you creatively transform this tension into compromises including both elements.

Ultimately, all these opposites are indications and impulses for an emotional maturation process. This is a matter of how well you can love and accept yourself.

Moon/Neptune in Conjunction

With Great Intuitive Understanding

You are sensitive, empathetic, and understanding. When someone suffers, you feel it. You have an open heart and ear for others, and you can respond to your fellow human beings with much sensitivity. In the process, you often forget yourself. You tend to let others use you or you sacrifice yourself for others. Perhaps during childhood you often experienced that other people determined what you needed. The others were there for you, and you were there for the others, so you had little opportunity to learn to clearly recognize your own needs. As a result, you possibly have a difficult time in expressing personal wishes as an adult.

You are good at perceiving the mood in your environment and let yourself be influenced by it. When you are together with someone who is sad, for example, you take on the sadness. In this way, you are captivated by the feelings of other people and it becomes difficult for you to feel your own needs. It's therefore important for you to learn to at least occasionally draw the line for yourself. Once you have found a stable sense of reality, you can express your rich imagination and sensitivity without having to fear that you will lose the ground beneath your feet or be taken advantage of.

COMMUNICATION AND THOUGHT

Mercury symbolizes the area of our personality related to thinking, information, and communication. The position of Mercury in a birth picture throws light on a person's way of thinking, preferred interests, and learning methods, as well as language and rhetorical abilities.

Mercury in Libra

Interested in Balance

You are a diplomat and don't like openly confronting another person in a conversation. With tact and intuitive understanding, practically in a veiled manner, you attempt to tell someone else your opinion. When you are involved in a conversation with someone, you emphasize what you have in common; you prefer to disregard differences. As a result, you show one aspect of your personality to one person and a completely different side of yourself to someone else. In the process, the border between a charming response to others and insincerity can become completely blurred.

Your mind is clear and flexible. It's easy for you to understand other people's ideas. You are open for new things and have a diversity of interests. Art, culture, or intellectual activities are indispensable for you. Whether you read, study, conduct a conversation, or think about things, you need a quiet and harmonious atmosphere. You appreciate the beauty of language and thought. Swearing holds little appeal for you. Making decisions isn't one of your strong points. You see both sides of things so much that it's hard for you to identify with one and exclude the other.

Mercury in the Twelfth House

Clarity Through Reflection and Contemplation

Your thinking is directed inwardly. You need time to think alone for yourself. For you to find your emotional equilibrium time and again, you must retreat to a quiet place and hold a type of inner dialog. This will enable you to process the impressions from your surrounding world. Perhaps you write a journal or find the necessary peace and quiet in nature.

You may possibly be interested in areas that are closely related to the inner world, the imagination, and aloneness and all-one-ness. Perhaps you seek interaction and conversations with old, lonely, sick, or addicted people. You have a great deal of intuitive understanding and can easily put yourself in someone else's place. Above all, this makes you easy to influence in conversations; but it also gives you the ability of listening to others, responding to them, and verbally standing up for people who are weaker.

Mercury/Neptune in a Harmonious Aspect

Thinking in Images

You have an abundance of imagination and talent for telling stories. Thinking in pictures is more interesting to you than strict logic. Perhaps you sometimes have difficulty in clearly formulating your thoughts and feel yourself to be misunderstood since it isn't easy to translate pictures into linear language. It may be that you are fascinated by some form of "picture language" - possibly fairytales or mythology, film, photography, or advertising.

No one can claim that you are basically unreasonable, but you perhaps sometimes let others "throw dust in your eyes" and talk you into something that you actually didn't want at all. Because you are so close to the world of images and imagination, it isn't always easy for you to differentiate between reality and illusion and stick with the bare facts. You are good at empathizing with others and reading between the lines. Listening is something that you are particularly good at. You need a secure hold within yourself so that you don't let yourself be influenced by other people's affairs.

RELATIONSHIPS AND ESTHETICS

When Venus sparkles in the sky as the morning or evening star, it is an expression of harmony and beauty in terms of reality and as an astrological symbol. It stands for the need to be balanced and have things in common, for the striving to build bridges. It is a distinctly feminine and erotic principle and corresponds to the aspect within us that longs for a partner, seeks and creates relationships, and can be open for and enjoy all the beauty in life. The Venus in us chooses what is appropriate and agreeable for us from the diversity of people and things.

Venus in Sagittarius

Generosity in Love

You spontaneously approach others and can quickly become enthused about someone. Relationships and interpersonal contacts offer you the opportunity for getting acquainted with something new and for inner growth. You have a good antenna for making the "right" contacts that also truly open up new horizons for you. You possibly value titles and outward appearances, occasionally also confusing the illusion with reality. You see what is positive in others and also give it your support. Within a partnership, this may mean that you very much idealize your partner and find it difficult to see and accept his or her true nature. You may possibly also give yourself a halo, consider yourself to be irresistible, and make excessive demands.

Your sense of beauty also includes the desire for expansiveness and growth. So you probably are fond of lively colors, dynamic forms, and rhythmic music since you see the possibility for inner expansiveness in movement.

Venus in the First House

I Am Me - Who Are You?

You like to display the qualities listed above. You are sociable and stand by your relationships; you don't think much of secretiveness. When you like someone, you also want to directly express this feeling. Wherever you may go, you probably have the need of immediately speaking up for peace and harmony. You also radiate a willingness to reach out to others. Your tactful and diplomatic nature can help you achieve great popularity. You need recognition. This may lead you to conforming too much or getting taken in by falseness.

Beauty - in any form - is probably important to you; you also like to show this to the outside world in the way you dress or behave, for example.

ACTIONS AND ASSERTION

Mars symbolizes masculinity and physical strength, as well as the capacity to take action and be assertive. It represents the part of our personality that is active in the outer world and wants to cause things to happen, that makes decisions and simply does things without asking, and that doesn't shy away from conflicts or confrontations. If something doesn't suit us, this is the part within us that defends itself and, if necessary, reacts with aggression and anger.

Mars in Libra

Assertion with Charm and Strategy

You are a good diplomat and always assert yourself in a polite, tactful, and charming manner. In the process, it can easily occur that you do what others want from you since you have the expectation of being appreciated and loved for what you do. It's not as simple for you to stand up for yourself. So it's easier for you assert yourself for the sake of others. An activity in which you conciliate and mediate should be particularly suitable for you.

Even when you take action in a way that is appropriate for you, you still don't lose sight of the other person. You have the talent of recognizing the effect that your activities have on others and don't forget the necessary consideration and fairness. It requires some practice for you to be successful at the balancing act between absolute charm and a purposeful will. However, once you master the role of the "iron hand in the velvet glove," you can also assert yourself in difficult things without becoming unpopular.

Mars in the Eleventh House

The Need for Group Activities

You want to do something in or for the community. In the course of your life, you develop an ability to motivate groups or even friends in order to work toward a common goal. Team work appeals to you. Your solidarity with the group repeatedly causes you to make an effort on behalf of your friends and colleagues.

You also exert a great deal of strength and energy for individualistic goals since you would like to express yourself. It's important for you to ask time and again whether you pursue goals for the common good or whether you declare your own goals to be the objective of the group. It can't be denied that you have a certain competitive attitude within a group or circle of friends. If you are successful in directing the need for activity into meaningful channels, friends and people with whom you share interests will have a stimulating effect on your initiative and ability to take action. You probably experience yourself as particularly active and full of life's joys when you are in a team, club, or group.

With great probability, the type of man who fascinates you personifies many of these qualities. This means that you like unconventional and independent men who imperturbably go their own way and with whom you are never quite certain how they will react next.

THE SEARCH FOR MEANING AND GROWTH

Jupiter symbolizes the optimist in us, the part that wants meaning and expansion and sometimes gets out of control. It lets us look out for something higher and rise above the banalities of everyday life. It symbolizes the part in us that creates a relationship between things. It fills sober reality with a meaning by apportioning significance to each thing and imparting symbolic content to situations, words, and deeds.

Jupiter in the Third House

Growth Through Communication

Ever since you were a child, you probably have experienced time and again that people seek conversations with you, encourage you to tell stories, and pay attention to you as a result. During the course of the years, you have become an optimist in the area of knowledge, information, and communication. You have trained good rhetorical abilities. When you speak, people listen to you. Perhaps you occasionally let yourself be led into appearing better informed than you actually are. You quickly get a general overview of an area of knowledge and don't get stuck in the details. When, for example, you learn a foreign language, you soon begin to speak it without struggling too long with grammatical formulas. You are very open for various areas of interest and tend to collect too much information; in the extreme case, you become a "perpetual student."

You have a good antenna for where you can get knowledge and information. Your open and generous way of speaking with others awakens the joy of communication in the other person and makes many things easier for you. In addition, you are good at convincing others of your opinion and have the talent of being able to impart a message or ideology.

Jupiter/Saturn in a Harmonious Aspect

Ideals and Reality

It's no problem for you to combine your life philosophy with everyday life. You have the ability of turning your ideas and visions into reality step by step. Or - seen from another perspective - your ideals are realistic enough to let themselves be turned into reality. You find a healthy happy medium between the urge for expansion and caution and between immoderation and denial. By applying your energies in a purposeful way, you can achieve a great deal.

In addition, you are a good mediator between the past and the future. You have the gift of connecting things tried and true with new ideas and thereby pointing the way for the future. In relation to society, you possess a healthy sense of self-worth and can make your contribution to constructive coexistence as a valuable member.

Jupiter/Pluto in Tension

Living Life to the Full

A concentrated energy slumbers - more or less - within you. It strives for the greatest and can be quite extreme. It wants to live life to the max and passionately searches for meaning. It scrutinizes every ideology and never really lets you come to rest.

Religion and church institutions may demand your attention time and again; for example, you object to the dogmas and power of the church. Loyalty is also a central theme for you. You defend yourself against injustices and are sometimes not too removed from fanaticism by doing so.

It's important for you to accept this inner demon. It can become an enormous motivation when you have found a goal that corresponds to your inclination toward greatness and gives your life a deeper meaning.

THE SEARCH FOR STRUCTURE AND ORDER

Saturn symbolizes the raised index finger within us, the inner authority with which we set ourselves boundaries and demand structure and responsibility from ourselves. The Saturn aspect within us is often very rigid, and then we block ourselves. However, if we have learned during the course of the years to reduce our fears and our standards of perfection, we will primarily experience Saturn as inner stability and security. In both the concrete and figurative sense, it symbolizes our backbone.

Saturn in the First House

The Demands of Making a Perfect Appearance

You expect yourself to always make a perfect appearance and do a great deal for impeccable looks that corresponds with social norms and customs. You hardly show your feelings and thoughts when they don't correspond with social rules. As a result, your behavior loses a great deal of its natural spontaneity. You probably have difficulty with being completely yourself and going your own way. Before you start something, you try to protect yourself as much as possible and get confirmation that you aren't doing anything antisocial. You only begin something new when you are quite certain that nothing will go wrong.

On the one hand, you limit yourself with this; but, on the other hand, struggling with the correct possibilities of expression, makes you become even more independent of your surrounding world. This process, which takes years, will lead you to a growing inner sense of security and stability, as well as a stronger personal charisma. With advancing age, you increasingly show yourself as you really are and give yourself the recognition that you previously needed from the surrounding world.

Saturn/Pluto in a Harmonious Aspect

Deriving Security from the Dark

You reject patriarchal and authoritarian forms, instinctively avoid impulsive behavior, and yet are still fascinated by these things in a strange way. You don't want to be driven or controlled by people with authority. You pay careful attention to your behavior so that you don't show any weak spots. One could almost say that you are afraid of the destructive power of the outside world. Not wanting to integrate yourself into a group, a position as an outsider, claustrophobia, or an uneasy feeling in large crowds of people are a few concrete examples of this. You are basically challenged to practice dealing with both reality and the inner world of dreams and images, creating a connection between them in time.

This darkness that you sense in the outside world reflects your own emotional depths. It's difficult for you to accept this dark and even wild and instinctual side of yourself. If you don't reject it, you will discover your vital force and attain insight down into the deepest depths of the human soul. As a result, you can develop a great sense of security - a security within yourself that no outer events can ever take away from you.

THE NEED FOR CHANGE

Uranus symbolizes the "wind spirit" within us that strives for psychological growth through constant change. It stirs up an inner unrest that drives us to set out time and again, that lets us seek variety and new experiences, and that keeps us from psychological and physical stagnation. It represents the wanderer within us who does not settle down for long anywhere. When something has barely become a habit, he tears down his tents and surprises us with new ideas. His originality knows no limits, and the same applies to his noncommittal nature.

Uranus in the Fourth House

The Area of Private and Family Life in Motion

Your family circumstances and your living situation are probably quite unconventional. It is possible that something in your family is outside of the traditional and accustomed framework. Or you have taken on the role of an outsider or rebel. Perhaps you hold completely different views than the rest of your family. Or you move frequently, rearrange the furniture, or give your home furnishings an original, possibly even eccentric touch. The common factor of these examples is the unrest that you bring into your private life.

This always involves the experience of not letting an emotional sense of security and a "warm nest" become rigid because of comfort but providing for change through a "fresh wind." A new situation brings new perceptions. By experimenting with your need for a sense of security, you will experience more and more of what you really need.

THE LONGING FOR LIBERATION AND DEVOTION

Neptune symbolizes our mystical side that continually dissolves the boundaries between our ego-consciousness and the outside world, reminding us that we are part of a greater whole. This part lets us feel the longing for another world. It can equally be the motivation for reconnecting with something divine, for total devotion and a readiness to help, or for retreating from life and losing ourselves, which ultimately results in self-pity and chaos.

Neptune in the Ninth House

Finding Meaning in Devotion to Something Greater

You tend to idealize your opinions and views of the world. Far more than the logic that is the foundation of a philosophy, you are fascinated by its spiritual content. So you hardly feel yourself obligated to the dogmas of a religion. You search for meaning in devotion to God, to a cosmic force, or simply to a greater whole. At the same time, you could easily work yourself into an ecstatic rapture, fall prey to a false guru, or go astray on a pseudo-esoteric trip.

When you believe that you recognize meaning in something - whether it is a religion, a philosophy of life, or a course of education, you can show an enormous amount of idealism for it. You give it all you have. If you are too uncritical in the process, you will one day discover that all of the beautiful ideas turn out to be illusions and burst like soap bubbles.

If you like to travel, you probably prefer Far-Eastern cultures, in which the mystical is allowed more space than in Western society. You open up both inwardly and externally to unknown worlds and are allowed to have the blissful experience of being supported by something greater.

Time and again, you seek and find the meaning of life in devotion to this greater whole. Difficulties arise because you may have problems recognizing which religious, philosophical, or ideological concepts will also not disappoint you in the long run.

THE "DARK" SIDE

Pluto symbolizes the most radical, energized, and passionate aspect of our personality that, especially because it is so bent on "all or nothing," also triggers fear. So we often feel this side of ourselves to be "dark" and inwardly turn away from it. Then we suppress this intensive part with somewhat the same effect as pressing a lid onto a pot with boiling water: We burn our fingers. We can only find an access to its power and liveliness when we accept this uncompromising and intensive part of ourselves and learn to deal with it. Then this aspect in particular can develop an enormous energy potential and lead us through and beyond profound crises.

Pluto in the Ninth House

On an Intensive Search for the Truth

You want the absolute truth and simultaneously harbor doubts whether this truth could also turn out to be an error. In your way of looking at things, there is also room for darkness and evil. It causes a strange mixture of fascination and defensiveness within you. The polar opposite of God is the Devil, of the light is the shadow, and of a truth is the possibility that it does not apply in the end.

You can be quite dogmatic and uncompromising in your opinions. Perhaps you cling too much to an attitude because you somehow find the thought of not having an opinion to be frightening. You may be searching for the deeper meaning of life in a way that is almost passionate. If you accept that a part of you wants to intensively seek meaning and truth, that the search and not the truth is important - which means the path and not the goal - then this will become a source of much strength and energy for you.

These pages aren't meant to say: "This is how you are! You do this and that, and this is how you think," even if the formulation sometimes may give this impression. These pages contain an overview of the symbolism of the planets, as they stood in the heavens at the time and place of your birth. According to experience and statistics, there are parallels between the planetary constellations and character traits. We can use these as guides through the countless aspects of our own personality, more consciously recognizing our motivations and behavior patterns with their help.

These pages are meant to give you more clarity and some sudden insights about yourself, as well as accompany you on a portion of your path in life.
